General Information and datasheet (Solaray)

Red Marine Algae

Description:	Red Marine Algae, or Dulse, has been used by people as a food staple for thousands of years. Often referred to as a sea vegetable, research has shown that the sulfated polysaccharides in Red Marine Algae may provide nutritional support for immune health. The active agent of red marine algae are carrageenans, a family of sulfated polysaccharides that in 2006 were found to be very effective against the sexually transmitted diseases HIV and genital herpes. In fact it is already being used in some condom lubricants where it has been found to inhibit HPV, human papilloviruses that cause genital warts. Carrageenans seem to be able to identify unfriendly proteins such as viruses and prevent them binding to human cell surfaces.
